

Australian Licensing Update

Melbourne, 5th July 2019: iSignthis Ltd (ASX: ISX|FRA: TA8) ("The Company") is pleased to announce that it has recently met with representatives from the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA) and the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA), and advises that its applications are progressing well, and likely issued this quarter. Engagement with the Australian Securities and Investment Commission (ASIC) also continues on our Australian Financial Services License (AFSL).

The Purchased Payment Facility (PPF) Authorised Deposit Taking Institution (ADI) license type applied for by iSignthis eMoney (AU) Pty Ltd ("ISEMAU") has a specific advantage to the Company over a standard ADI, in that the Tier 1 capital requirements are significantly less than that of a standard ADI that offers credit and loans.

The ISEMAU wholesale neobanking model does not require or rely upon retail deposits, nor an ongoing requirement for wholesale capital to fund a loan book. In turn, this removes market pressures and risk experienced by standard ADI's and retail neobanks in raising and maintaining Tier 1 capital for loan funding.

Conversely, wholesale funds managed under custodial arrangements by ISEMAU can be deposited with standard ADI's in interest bearing accounts.

ISEMAU does not consider any existing or recently licensed standard ADI, or restricted ADI neobanks as being competitors to the Company.

The PPF class of ADI has only been previously issued only once before by APRA, to Paypal Inc (NYSE:PYPL). However, Paypal does not have account facilities with the RBA, and relies upon other ADI's to provide it access to the cards and payments networks.

The combined AFSL, ADI license and RBA account facilities are expected to allow ISEMAU to focus on its payment operations, custodial, indirect retail and wholesale electronic money PPF accounts.

iSignthis will finalise its application to be allocated a Bank Sub Branch (BSB) number upon approval from the RBA, such that its Flykk retail and ISXMoney wholesale electronic facilities are accessible to and from the Australian payments network.

The Card Access Regime under which iSignthis is a card scheme principal member is a separate regime to that of the ADI, and is regulated by the RBA independent of APRA.
